Arran Coastal Way

The Arran Coastal Way runs for some 65 miles around the Island of Arran. Rich in scenery, archeology, castles, caves and beaches, it is easily reached by ferry from Ardrossan and the Way can be comfortably completed in under seven days. Alternatively, it breaks down into a series of fine day walks or can be completed in several long weekends. The Way is well served by buses and there is a variety of accommodation from B&Bs to classy hotels.

The Coastal Way provides both low level walks and continuous walking around the coast of Arran. Walkers can now use a route around Arran's coastline in all weather conditions that passes through most of the villages on the island.

For many years walkers have used the mountainous terrain in the north of Arran for upland walking and there are many well established routes into the hills. The Coastal Way, however, affords a combination of the many varied habitats that the island has to offer, including stretches of forest track, rugged and gentle coastlines plus more mountainous terrain, all of which follow a continuous 100 km route around the island. The paths are all well walked and should be easily completed by the average walker. However, it needs to be stressed that many parts of the Coastal Way are simple, basic paths that can be muddy or boulder strewn and which will, on occasion, require clambering over rocks.
