Skelmorlie Glen

Skelmorlie Glen, lying approximately 1 km south east of the town of Skelmorlie, is one of the best examples of semi-natural woodland in North Ayrshire. It is a botanically-rich mixed deciduous gorge woodland with alder dominating the stream sides and lower slopes, ash and elm in the higher areas, and eventually oak and birch in the highest reaches. The understorey is predominantly of hazel but bird cherry, rowan and regenerating canopy species are locally abundant.

The woodland floor is covered with a diverse range of plant such as woodruff, sanicle, dog's mercury and wood melick, as well as less common species such as alternate-leaved golden-saxifrage, smooth-stalked sedge, giant bellflower and wood stitchwort.

The best time to visit this woodland is in spring or early summer when the ground is carpeted with woodland flowers.
